Philadelphia, Nov. 23.-J. Armstrong Drexel disappeared into the clouds from the aviation exhibition at the Point Breeze track this afternoon, pushed his 100-horsebower Bleriot monoplane almost two miles into the air, and won a new world's altitude record for aeroplanes when he hung at a height of 9,970 feet in the mists above Ambler before a sixmile glide through the air landed him and his machine in an open field at Oreland, a suburb, three miles north of

For thirty minutes before he landed Drexel underwent one of the most remarkable experiences that are recorded even in the colorful annals of aviation. The official barograph of the Aero Club of America slung on the frame of his machine, in plain view, had registered the record-breaking height when he found that his propeller- had lost its lifting power, owing to the lightness of the air at that great attitude. For almost half an hour, while out of sight of earth, he jumped and jockeyed the machine in an effort to force the wavering needle to the 19,000-foot mark.

An examination of the instrument afterward showed that the ink had run cut of the registering needle at the 9,970 Randolph Macon College. mark, and that the aviator possibly should have to his credit a flight of a good deal more than 19,000 feet upward.

Drexel left the starting ground on his try for a new world's record at 3.23 p. m., and was in the air an hour and twenty-one minutes before the suburbanites for miles around the vicinity of his landing place were startled at the sight of a big bird-like machine coming pounding down out of the quiet skies. During the last stages of his flight Drexel had lost his bearings. He did not have any idea of his whereabouts when he started to slide through the clouds that had hidden

Old Man Finds Sweetheart of Sixtyfive Years Ago.

Iola, Kans., Nov. 23.-A love affair that had its inception sixty-five years ago at a country school in Warren County reached its climax to-day in the marriage here of Harvey T. Short, of Rozeman,

Mont., and Mrs. Mary E. Morey, of this place. The bridegroom is eighty-one years When Mary Harbert and Harvey Short were children their parents lived near each other, and the boy and girl went to school together. They were sweet-hearts, but drifted apart and both were married. Eventually the helpmate of each died. Last Tuesday Short, who had lost trees of the blank of police, who feared a clash if the fulost trace of his boyhood sweetheart, came here to visit his nephew, Dr. Will
